ـّ	Duplicated letter (for the single letter), and underlined (if represented by two letters)

[1] If a word contains two individual letters which could be mistaken for one, then the second will be capitalized, example: IsHām — which could be mistaken for another word, so in order to avoid this it will be typed as: IsHām.

Table of Contents

1 The First Chapter 4
2 The Second Chapter 4

1. The First Chapter

Ordinary prose. Paragraphs are flush left with a small gap between them and no first-line indent. Just leave a blank line for a new paragraph.

Allah said:
[meaning]: ﴿...﴾ [Surah Al-Fātiḥah (1:5)]

The Messenger of Allah ﷺ said:
«...» [Al-Bukhārī, no. 0000]

Ibn ʿAbbās رضي الله عنه said:
«...» [...]

2. The Second Chapter

Use transliteration for Arabic words written in Latin letters, (a grey round gloss) inside a quotation, [a grey square editorial note], and may Allah be pleased with him for an honorific written out in words. A live link works in a footnote too.[2]
